Being a student of true history, I am astounded by the absolute crap that is taught to our children today in our failed education system. Our true history has been purposely hidden from our children, and instead our so called "History" books are packed with nothing more than lies and falsehoods. It has been my purpose in writing this blog to bring true history out into the open for everyone to see and read for themselves.

One of the greatest lies in so called "recorded" history is the circumstances behind the Japanese attack on December 7th, 1941, on the US naval base at Pearl Harbor, Oahu island, Hawaii USA. Our "history" books continue to promote the lies that this attack was "unprovoked" and a "sneak attack" by the Japanese on an "unsuspecting" American fleet. The truth is that this attack was absolutely not a "sneak attack", and the American government knew exactly when and how the Japanese were to strike Pearl Harbor! The sad part is that 2400 American lives were extinguished that fateful day by the criminality of a regime in Washington that wanted desperately to get the US involved in World War II. It was a "day of infamy" indeed.

I came across the following article from The Telegraph online news service out of the United Kingdom, at www.telegraph.co.uk, entitled: "Pearl Harbour Memo Shows US Warned Of Japanese Attack", and it further vindicates everything that I have said for years about how the American government knew exactly when and how the Japanese were to attack Pearl Harbor. First, here is that article for my own readers to view, and I do have some further comments to follow:

Pearl Harbour memo shows US warned of Japanese attack

On the 70th anniversary of Pearl Harbour, the attack that propelled America into the Second World War, a declassified memo shows that Japanese surprise attack was expected.

It was described by President Franklin D.Roosevelt as "a date that will live in infamy", a day on which the slaughter of 2,400 US troops drew America into Second World War and changed the course of history.

Now, on the 70th anniversary of Japan's devastating bombardment of the US Pacific Fleet at Pearl Harbour, Hawaii, evidence has emerged showing that President Franklin D.Roosevelt was warned three days before the attack that the Japanese empire was eyeing up Hawaii with a view to "open conflict."

The information, contained in a declassified memorandum from the Office of Naval Intelligence, adds to proof that Washington dismissed red flags signalling that mass bloodshed was looming and war was imminent.

"In anticipation of possible open conflict with this country, Japan is vigorously utilizing every available agency to secure military, naval and commercial information, paying particular attention to the West Coast, the Panama Canal and the Territory of Hawaii," stated the 26-page memo.

Dated December 4, 1941, marked as confidential, and entitled "Japanese intelligence and propaganda in the United States," it flagged up Japan's surveillance of Hawaii under a section headlined "Methods of Operation and Points of Attack."

It noted details of possible subversives in Hawaii, where nearly 40 per cent of inhabitants were of Japanese origin, and of how Japanese consulates on America's west coast had been gathering information on American naval and air forces. Japan's Naval Inspector's Office, it stated, was "primarily interested in obtaining detailed technical information which could be used to advantage by the Japanese Navy."

"Much information of a military and naval nature has been obtained," it stated, describing it as being "of a general nature" but including records relating to the movement of US warships.

The memo, now held at the Franklin D. Roosevelt Presidential Library and Museum in upstate New York, has sat unpublicised since its declassification 26 years ago. Its contents are revealed by historian Craig Shirley in his new book "December 1941: 31 Days that Changed America and Saved the World."

Three days after the warning was delivered to the White House, hundreds of Japanese aircraft operating from six aircraft carriers unleashed a surprise strike on the US Navy's base at Pearl Harbour, wiping out American battleships, destroyers and air installations. A total of 2,459 US personnel were killed and 1,282 injured.

Conspiracy theorists have long claimed that Roosevelt deliberately ignored intelligence of an imminent attack in Hawaii, suggesting that he allowed it to happen so that he would then have a legitimate reason for declaring war on Japan. Up to that point, public and political opinion had been against America's entry into what was seen largely as a European war, despite Roosevelt's private support for the Allies' fight against the so-called Axis - Germany, Italy and Japan.

But Mr Shirley said: "Based on all my research, I believe that neither Roosevelt nor anybody in his government, the Navy or the War Department knew that the Japanese were going to attack Pearl Harbour.

There was no conspiracy.

"This memo is further evidence that they believed the Japanese were contemplating a military action of some sort, but they were kind of in denial because they didn't think anybody would be as audacious to move an army thousands of miles across the Pacific, stop to refuel, then move on to Hawaii to make a strike like this."

As with the September 11 terrorist attacks in 2001, US leadership was guilty of a "failure of imagination" in its inability to translate warning signs into a specific prediction of the horror that lay ahead, he said.

Roosevelt declared war on Japan the day after the blitz on Pearl Harbour. Japan, Germany and Italy reciprocated with their own declarations, but America's involvement in the war turned the tide against the Axis powers and ultimately led the Allies to victory.

Americans, who a year previously had been assured by Roosevelt that they would not be sent to fight foreign wars, suddenly found their fates transformed. The US military swelled, with 16 million heading off to war, and women took on new and more widespread roles in the workforce, and in the military.

Washington became a global power base and the War Powers Act gave the president supreme executive authority. The "America First" movement, which had lobbied against the country's entry into the war and at its peak had 800,000 members, disbanded within days.

"December 7, 1941, was the powder-keg that changed the world. It changed America instantly from an isolationist country on the morning of December 7 to an internationalist country on the morning of December 8," said Mr Shirley.

The 70th anniversary of the tragedy at Pearl Harbour is being marked with a week of commemorative events in Hawaii. They culminate on Wednesday in a minute's silence and a ceremony of remembrance overlooking the wreck site of the USS Arizona, which sank with the loss of 1,177 lives.

Of the 29,000 survivors who joined the Pearl Harbour Survivors Association following its foundation in 1958, only ten per cent are still alive, most aged in their late 80s and beyond. With so few left, and most unable to travel to reunions or help with the group's administration, the PHSA will close down after the anniversary.

"It's going to be a poignant moment. Sooner or later we're all going to be gone," said Duane Reyelts of St Augustine, Florida, who was a 19-year-old signalman aboard the USS Oklahoma when it was bombed at Pearl Harbour.

He will turn 90 later this month, but still has vivid memories of waking in his bunk after working the midnight watch, when the ship's warning system sprang to life with the order: "All hands man your battle stations." Seconds later, a torpedo hit with a thunderous explosion. He could hear vast amounts of water pouring in below, and eight more torpedoes. The ship turned over, forcing him to scramble up a wall to escape.

"I happened to be small enough to get out of a porthole. When I got out, I was sitting on the bottom of the ship and I couldn't believe what I was seeing: planes were attacking and the whole harbour seemed to be on fire. Bodies in the water, smoke, screams," he said.

He hesitated to jump in the water, but had no choice as a stream of machine-gun fire rained around him from the aircraft overhead. He swam to the USS Maryland, where he joined a line of sailors hauling ammunition.

"The Navy and armed forces must have had notification that something could happen; being a signalman on the bridge and being on lookout, that was something we were told - if you see a periscope out there, it may not be ours. But we never really imagined an assault of this nature," he said.

He will re-tell his story once more during a remembrance service aboard a US Navy vessel on Wednesday, when the ashes of Pearl Harbour veterans who have died during the last year will be scattered at sea.

"Those of us who are left try to tell our stories as much as possible, not just for history's sake but because America needs to be kept alert today," he said. "America needs to remember the lessons of Pearl Harbour."

NTS Notes: It seems that Pearl Harbor: "The Mother Of All Conspiracies" may actually be the "Mother Of All False Flag Operations"...As this article states: "There was no conspiracy".... FDR knew exactly when and how the attack was going to take place!

The facts are simple: The United States needed their excuse to get involved in the European war against Germany, and they were looking for any excuse possible to get the American public to support that involvement. (This seems strangely similar to what is happening right now with the US government looking for an excuse to attack Iran!). In 1940, a US naval intelligence officer, A H McCollum, wrote a memo to the government explaining how the United States could get into the war in Europe through the "back door" by getting the Japanese to attack the naval base at Pearl Harbor. I have my own article about the McCollum report of 1940 right here for anyone to view:

<http://northerntruthseeker.blogspot.com/2009/12/more-re-writing-of-history-smoking-gun.html>

What the US government did after the release of the McCollum report was to freeze all of Japan's assets and to create an oil and raw materials embargo against Japan itself in mid 1941. This was done to provoke the Japanese into attacking America due to the necessity for Japan to seize resources in Asia, that were cut off from America, as a result of that embargo.

It is a fact that American intelligence knew exactly where the Japanese strike fleet, "Kido Butai", was at all times after it was launched from Japan on November 25th, 1941, for its attack on Pearl Harbor, by its listening posts in the north Pacific Ocean and made sure that Pearl Harbor was not warned of the imminent attack.

The US navy even made sure that all modern ships were out of Pearl Harbor for the attack of December 7th, leaving only slow and outdated World War I vintage battleships as bait for the Japanese. It is also a fact that none of the modern American aircraft carriers of the US Pacific fleet assigned to Pearl Harbor at that time, Enterprise, Saratoga, or Lexington, along with their fast escort ships, were "conveniently" in the harbor during the Japanese attack.

What we have here, readers, was the pre-planned, premeditated, and diabolical setup by the US government to get the Japanese to attack Pearl Harbor. What FDR and his cohorts in Washington DC did was to have 2,400 American lives extinguished to get the US involved in World War II. That readers was absolutely treason, and murder.

I do believe that it is time to have all of our so called "History" books re-written to reflect exactly what happened with regards to the attack on Pearl Harbor. The facts coming out now show how again how badly we have been purposely lied to!

More to come
